2009 BUYERS GUIDE

Visual Studio Magazine Buyers' Guide Product Listings

The 2009 Visual Studio Magazine Buyers' Guide listings comprise more than 700 individual products and services, ranging from developer tooling and UI components to Web hosting and instructor-led training. Included for each product is contact and pricing information. Keep in mind that many products come in multiple SKUs and with varied license options, so it's always a good idea to contact vendors directly for specific pricing.

The developer tools arena is a vast and growing space. As such, we're always on the prowl for new tools and vendors. Know of a product our readers might want to learn more about? E-mail us at vsmedit@1105media.com.

Beyond the Buyers' Guide

This year's Visual Studio Magazine Buyers' Guide and Readers Choice Awards reflect emerging trends in the .NET development space. From cloud computing and XML to Silverlight and SharePoint, we often saw top products—addressing hot technologies—rise to the top of our score cards. But development isn't driven by products; it's driven by challenge and opportunity.

With that in mind, we asked a number of industry experts and Visual Studio Magazine contributors to offer brief insight on the technologies that .NET developers need to pay attention to now. Here's what they said.

Let SharePoint Add Sizzle to Business Intelligence

Andrew Brust • Chief, New Technology, twenty-six New York

Business intelligence (BI) is hot and SharePoint is hot and sexy, so data visualization should constitute the sizzling intersection between the two. Yet most of Microsoft's SharePoint-resident data visualization solutions are downright ugly. Thankfully, Microsoft is doing something about it. One, the company is gradually embedding visualization into its stack—starting with Reporting Services—with the data-visualization technology acquired from Dundas Data Visualization Inc. two years ago. And two,

Microsoft is building its own Silverlight-based controls and SharePoint Web Parts for data visualization. This work is proceeding slowly, however. In the interim, look to components from vendors like Infragistics Inc., ComponentOne LLC, ChartFX and Dundas itself, along with some custom Web Part development of your own, to fill the gap. The extra impact of sophisticated visualization technology can transform a decent BI implementation into a great one.

Andrew J. Brust (andrew.brust@26ny.com) is chief, new technology, for consultancy twenty-six New York, as well as a Microsoft regional director and MVP. He's also the co-author of "Programming Microsoft SQL Server 2008" (Microsoft Press, 2008).

Whither .NET Services Workflow?

*Roger Jennings • Principal,
OakLeaf Systems*

The .NET Services team announced in a June 12, 2009, blog post that .NET Workflow Services will be removed from the sixth .NET Services community technology preview (CTP). It won't be included in the promised release of the Azure Services Platform in late 2009. Instead, the team will reintroduce Workflow Services based on the .NET 4 Workflow engine after .NET 4 releases. I'm unmoved by the claim in the post, which says, "One of the comments that we've consistently heard about the .NET Workflow Service is that you want the Workflow Service to be built on .NET Framework 4's workflow engine." Only 54 of the 305 total threads in the .NET Services Technical Discussions forum as of June 17, 2009, contained the term "workflow," and I saw no requests in those for the intended actions. Removing, rather than deprecating, a major Azure feature is a total fail, even if it's only temporary. Roger Jennings (Roger_Jennings@compuserve.com) is a Visual Studio Magazine contributing editor and data-oriented .NET developer who manages the OakLeaf Systems blog (oakleafblog.blogspot.com). Jennings has written several books, including "Professional ADO.NET 3.5 with LINQ and the Entity Framework" (WROX/Wiley, 2009).

Fixing SQL Data ServicesRoger Jennings • Principal,
OakLeaf Systems*

SQL Data Services (SSDS) got a “mid-course correction” when Microsoft dropped the Authority-Container-Entity (ACE) data model. Instead, Microsoft has opted in favor of fully relational SQL Server instances and databases in the Azure Services Platform’s forthcoming SQL Data Service (SDS). This is very good news. .NET developers complained that the ACE approach in SSDS was almost indistinguishable from Azure tables’

Entity-Attribute-Value (EAV) data model. Missing relational features—such as ORDER BY, TOP(n), stored procedures, transactions, triggers, foreign keys and joins—made moving existing data-intensive applications to the Windows Azure cloud extremely difficult, if not impossible. Microsoft listened to its developer cadres, bit the bullet and announced an impending change to “SQL Server in the cloud” on Feb. 23, 2009, at the VS Live! conference in San Francisco. An invitational SDS CTP started in July 2009, with final implementation scheduled for release with Windows Azure by the end of 2009.

XML Gets Business Savvy with XBRLAlexander Falk • CEO, Altova GmbH*

From Web Services and XAML to Office Open XML and SharePoint, there seems to be a new use of XML in every new generation of software. You can expect to hear more about XBRL this year. XBRL is designed to make financial data transparent and reusable—useful both for financial reporting to the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission and to investors analyzing companies. Look for XBRL to become prevalent for developers as it finds widespread adoption within the financial sector and beyond.

Alexander Falk (E-MAIL TKTKTK) is co-founder and CEO of XML-tools provider Altova GmbH and co-creator of the Altova XMLSpy XML editor and development environment. He's also a member of the World Wide Web Consortium (W3C) XML Schema working group that defined the XML Schema 1.0 specification, as well as the Object Management Group.

.NET RIA Services Boost Silverlight Development

Peter Vogel • Principal, PH&V Information Services

.NET rich Internet application (RIA)

Services reduces Web Services to what it should be: plumbing. You create methods in ASP.NET that retrieve data and perform updates on the server. Then versions of those methods automatically become available to your Silverlight application running on the client. Under the hood, Web Services is busy shuttling everything back and forth—but that's not your problem.

You can concentrate on delivering rich functionality to your users. In the currently available preview, you can still see all the moving parts—not a bad thing—but you can also see the bright shiny future that .NET RIA Services promises.

Peter Vogel (peter.vogel@phvis.com) is a principal in PH&V Information Services, specializing in ASP.NET development with expertise in service-oriented architecture, XML and database and user interface design. He has written several books on application development using Microsoft technologies and presents at conferences around the world.

Silverlight 3 Gets LOB

*Dan Wahlin • Founder,
The Wahlin Group*

Silverlight isn't just for games and fancy photo viewer applications, as some seem to think. Silverlight 3 ups the ante significantly by adding features that enable robust line-of-business applications that can connect and manipulate data from a wide variety of data sources. New controls—such as the RIA Services data-source controls and the new DataForm control—allow data to be displayed, inserted, updated and deleted, with business rules applied along the way, using a minimal amount of programming code. Silverlight 3 applications can even be run out of the browser and started directly from the desktop, thus making it easy for users to interact with and start applications without having to navigate to a page in the browser. If you're looking to build RIAs that behave like traditional desktop apps, yet have the benefit of a Web deployment model, take a look at what Silverlight 3 has to offer.

Dan Wahlin (dwahlin@xmlforasp.net), Microsoft MVP for ASP.NET and XML Web Services, is the founder of The Wahlin Group, which specializes in .NET and SharePoint on-site, online and video training and consulting solutions. Wahlin has written several books on .NET including "Professional Silverlight 2 for ASP.NET Developers" (Wrox, 2009).
